

“There is something at work in my soul which I do not understand.”
- Frankenstein

When Frankenstein fled, he found himself alone and hideous. No one accepted him (being a corpse-parts conglomeration can do that to you), except for one old blind man. He hoped that the blind man’s family of cottagers would give him compassion, but even they drove him away. When he ran across William, he killed the boy out of revenge. In short, he’s ticked off that his maker created him to be alone and miserable, and so would Frankenstein please make him a female companion.

“What can stop the determined heart and resolved will of man?”

Mary
Wallstonecraft
Shelley

Frankenstein

Frankenstein

Mary Wallstonecraft Shelley